

Prick Up Your Ears

The CITY LIMITS formation drinking team managed to thrill a packed Savoy

Top Floor last week with a spectacular display of alcohol-induced gymnastics

Sofa So Good

Something Happens round off what's been a highly successful year at home with a pre-Christmas Irish tour that brings them to the Two Mile Inn on Thursday December 20th. Tickets for the gig, now on sale at FM Records, are expected to shift faster than a couple of lovesick rabbits and are priced at £ 6 which includes a free bus to and from the Ennis Road venue. The Happens are currently back in the Top 10 here with 'Parachute', the third single to be culled from their chart topping 'Stuck Together With God's Glue' album.

Support for the night comes from local hotshots They Do It With Mirrors and The Cranberry Saw Us who are gearing up for the release of their debut cassingle in early December.

Two more gigs have been confirmed this week for the Savoy Top Floor. Hirsute Belfast crooner Brian Kennedy, who was one of the surprise hits of the Feile, is in on Sunday December 2nd. while the born again A House (see record review on Page 30) headline the SoPS end of year bash on Thursday December 13th. with a little help from The Coup.

Although I've yet to receive precise dates/venues, I have it on unimpeachable authority that An Emotional Fish, the Black Velvet Band and Mary Coughlan will also be adding to the festive cheer. More scam as details are finalised.

humble scribe executing a daring scissors-kick while quaffing a pint of Cherry Brandy. This all proved to be a trifle more captivating than Cactus World News who, despite being tighter than the proverbial duck's posterior, failed to excite in quite the same way as they used to a couple of years ago. Tried and tested favourites like 'World's Apart' and 'Year's Later' still tickled the old tastebuds but, of the new songs, only current 45 "Don't Let Me Down" impressed.

The Cacti are faced with a prickly problem, they can't afford to live on past glories

but the creative spark needed which culminated in your

to win over a fresh audience seems to have disappeared. I won't bore you with yet another Cranberry Saw Us live review, suffice to say Dolores' and the boys continue to improve at an alarming rate and ultimately stole the show from Cactus. This lot are special.

The Word were also in town last Saturday and thanks to a 100 metre dash even a steroid-enhanced Ben Johnson would have been hard pushed to beat, we managed to catch the first half of their turbo charged set at the Speakeasy. The budding stadium rockers have recently added a second guitarist which has given old faves like 'Love's Strange Ways' and 'Kiss The Ground' a far meatier, altogether ballsier sound. Fronted by likable London wide boy Nick Russell, the Dublin-based 5 piece have a certain swagger which suggests their aspirations are well placed. The Word are unashamedly chasing the Yankee dollar and, with a major Stateside management deal already inked, are apparently attracting considerable record company interest there. It's not hard to see why! JAMIE LEE COPS IT -

This Week's New Films

After a brief but successful flirtation with comedy, Jamie Lee Curtis is back as a hard-nosed rookie cop in the refreshingly original BLUE STEEL (18). To be fair, the subject matter is fairly standard but Director Kathryn Bigelow has gone out of her way to avoid the normal macho cliches which I'm sure will come as a major disappointment to those of you who regard Charles Bronson and Clint Eastwood as the epitome of manhood. There's a gritty sense of realism running through the film which makes it utterly compelling, the blood doesn't look like tomato ketchup and the characters are strong enough, and realistic enough, to readily identify with. Ms. Curtis plays Megan Turner, the raw recruit who suddenly finds herself out from behind the desk and on the streets of the Rotten Apple. She soon comes face to face with the seamier side of New York's underworld when she's forced to shoot an armed robber during a grocery store hold-up. One of the customers, respectable commodities broker and part-time psycho Ron Silver, steals the suspect's gun and goes on a random killing spree of his own. The twist is he's so enamoured with our heroine that he engraves her name on the bullets. The gloriously O.T.T. finale is a fitting climax to what is undoubtedly Jamie Lee's best screen performance to date.

Father and son Martin and Charlie Sheen join forces again for STOCKADE (12), a refreshingly intelligent military romp set in West Germany during the '60's. Sheen Jnr. plays Private Franklin Bean, a National Service recruit who decides to expedite his stay in the U.S. Army by getting his knuckles tattooed and punching an M.P. during a drunken binge. Much to his disgust, this fails to gain him a discharge and he ends up being slung into the base's stockade which is under the command of the seriously unstable Sqt. Otis McKinney, alias his Da. Bean manages to survive McKinney's inhumane treatment with the help of his fellow inmates but, when tragedy strikes, is forced to reevaluate exactly where his loyalties lie. Sheen Snr. also directs and manages to acquithimself admirably, proving that some actors are every bit as good behind the camera as they are in front of it. It might not be quite the stuff box office smashes are made of but it's an eminently watchable film with a neat, easily digestible line in social comment.

On paper, REPOSSES should be one of the year's or smashes but ends up being as funny as Iraqi breim mi and those other superatorie Squad'. Nielsen is poervi as the straight qui radiigh liners but looks way autolit who's called in to purply esome spart and erisits Dirty Harry and see 1 to know his limbours to Lessie should say a h Frank Drobin Mr. Sur. OF STATE OF THE DIKKES IN A SE $2.200 deposed 28/30 basically a parody of The Em which were so popular time '70's and casts original lest Blair alongside Lesle Neter normally deadpan grey land who starred in Airpare as as gootball prest Futer in ing to the mayben 4th

St. Mary's Cathedral Arts Week

St. Mary's Cathedral hosts its first ever Arts Week next month which, if successful, is set to become a regular highlight of the city's cultural calendar. The programme kicks off on Saturday December 1st. with Theatre Omnibus' reenactment of 'The Waking of Brian Born'. Featuring a colourful cast of 180 players, the procession will leave the top of O'Connell Street at 11.00 am and gradually wind its way down to the Cathedral where the participants will be greeted by Mayor Paddy Muddon.

The visually stunning show is described by the company as "street theatre" and was a big hit when first performed during the summer at the Ennis Arts Festival. Other key events include:

Sunday December 2nd. Advent Carol Service (7.30 pm).

Monday December 3rd. Lunchtime Organ Recital by Stuart Gray (1.10 pm) and Scasonal Poetry & Prose with Songs for Christmas by the Friends of the Museum (8.00 pm). Tuesday December 4th, Pinno, Cello & Clarinet by Josef, Calef, Moira & Stuart Gray (1.10 pm) and the Limerick Connection Showband (8.00 pm).

Wednesday December 5th, Guitar Recital by John Hockedy (1.10 pm) and Drama with Brian Friel's 'Lovers' by the Limerick Theatre Group and Anton Chekov's "The Bess" by the Castlewood Players of Cratice (8.00)

Thursday December 6th. Shokoquine in 3O stringston' by Prespositions Productions it 55 guest 3 mind Figuresian can then Silangen and 3, immeration writing

Ald Jim Kenney T.D. Ken LOWER SHEET LAND BOOK Printer December 34 ARMEN COMPLET OF THE BANK THE SECTIONS & A & & The service of the latest and writement of the All the spirits here in L the disappointments as for the time being wine Road on 22nd or letup for the top playdnochance to recuperwbethin on the ground ms resources for the man this year. So whats or new is not the word. whas been shown by the s in this neck of s is that players with de players with so called