Hey there!

Still in Zagreb, although we are due to fly to Budapest in a few hours. Last night was our first concert in Croatia and the audience went ape-shit! (That means they went wild!) I thought we might have to stop playing for a while as the crowd swayed twenty feet left and then twenty feet right like a big swell on the sea, but luckily they settled down after four or five songs! Also, Dolores wore a witches hat and broom for the encore and it looked like the "Promises" video. It was the first time ever playing on Halloween, so why not!!

We had a day off before the show here, so I got a chance to wander around the city. It's really beautiful here and the people are very nice. I managed to locate a nice winter hat for myself, complete with ear-flaps! It doesn't really get that cold at home in Ireland, but I hope to get to use it in the colder climates abroad early next year!

The Spanish and Portuguese shows went brilliantly as usual, so we would like to officially thank all of you for your support!! Granada is a really beautiful city, however, I could not tell you what La Coruna is like, because I spent the whole of my day off in bed due to food poisoning, a very unpleasant experience!

I've been feeding my habit of purchasing cd's recently and I got my hands on Beck's new one; Jeff Buckley 'Songs To No One'; Peter Gabriel's 'Up' and Beth Orthon's 'Daybreaker'. I'm afraid I haven't listened to any of the others that much as I find myself putting on 'Daybreaker' and can't seem to bring myself to remove it! It is one of the most incredibly georgous albums I've heard for ages!

Talk to ya later!
